

Ventilation in American Dwellings: With a Series of Diagrams, Presenting Examples in Different Classes of Habitations (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Ventilation in American Dwellings: With a Series of Diagrams, Presenting Examples in Different Classes of Habitations The object of the following pages is to present a series of examples of ventilation applied to American habitations, and to assist in the introduction of more extended measures for meeting cases of extreme temperature, whether of heat or cold. Some apology may, perhaps, be required on the part of the author, in entering on this subject. There is no practical question, probably, where the experience of different nations can prove more mutually advantageous than in those departments of Art and Science that minister to the wants of daily life. He has not hesitated, therefore, to give, in accordance with the views of Mr. Wiley, the following examples and explanations. They refer to those points connected with the state of ventilation that have most forcibly arrested his attention in the United States, and are arranged in a form that will enable those not professionally acquainted with the subject, to trace their bearings on the condition of their own habitations. Observations made at the Academy of Medicine by Dr. Francis and other members of the profession, an address by Dr. Stevens, printed in the State papers at Albany, and the very able works on Ventilation published in the United States by Dr. Wyman, Dr. Griscom, and Dr. Bell, as well as publications and papers by Dr. Jarvis of Dorchester, Dr. Stone of Washington, and Dr. Barton of New Orleans, have convinced the author that the importance of this subject is widely acknowledged and supported with great energy, ability, and zeal on this, as well as on the other side of the Atlantic, however imperfect the ideas and practice of the great masses of the population may still be in respect to it both in the old and the new world. On the subject of quarantine, that concentrates more ventilating questions than any other department of sanitary improvement, he was fortunate enough to be introduced, by the Board of Health of the City of New York, to Dr. Harris, whose practice with such resources as were within his power, was full of interest, while nothing could be more significant than the desertion of the principal building intended for hospital accommodation, in consequence of its imperfect and unsatisfactory ventilation.
